Why Digital Dentistry

The advent of computer aided design and manufacturing (CAD/CAM) introduced a breakthrough technology with the potential to profoundly impact the future of oral health care.

A recent study by the American College of Prosthodontists confirmed that the underlying cause for the slow adoption of digital dentistry isn't the technology or its effect on delivering better patient care, but rather an understanding of its applications, benefits, and available education and training for its users.

CAD/CAM technology is revolutionizing dentistry as we know it. Digital solutions can significantly improve workflow efficiencies and enhance the patient experience, and the ACP is pleased to deliver programming on this critical topic for all of dentistry.

Who Should Attend

Prosthodontists, general dentists, dental laboratory technicians, dental specialists with an interest in both clinical and laboratory technology, residents, and dental students.

This symposium is designed for dental professionals who want to learn state of the art digital dentistry solutions for the treatment of restorative patients. Attendees will be provided with the latest information on digital treatment technologies ranging from individual tooth restoration to complex reconstruction and rehabilitation. Best practices and actual clinical workflows essential to achieving the highest clinical and esthetic results will be showcased. Clinicians who want their practices to lead the future of dental care delivery systems with patient-focused digital dentistry solutions are encouraged to attend.
