John R. Frost was born into a large family on January 30, 1918, in Mocksville, North Carolina. The family later moved to St. Louis, Missouri, where he worked as a newspaper boy. Following high school, he attended the prestigious Washington University in St. Louis and studied dentistry. To finance his college tuition, John's uncle loaned him funds in advance to obtain his degree. Upon receiving his diploma in 1942, he enlisted in the United States Army as a First Lieutenant and separated at the conclusion of World War II. He had a dental practice in Missouri for two years but then decided to return to military life, which led him to Japan, Germany, and many stations stateside. After thirty years of service, he retired in 1972 as a highly decorated colonel. During his retirement, he enjoyed extensive traveling, hunting, fishing, golf, Cadillac's, and invested in real estate. He will be fondly remembered for his pleasing voice, quick wit, charm, and great humor.
