Dr. Geoffrey R. Cunningham recognized by the American College of Prosthodontists

CHICAGO – Geoffrey R. Cunningham, DDS, MS, FACP, was honored with the Private Practice Prosthodontist Award for the Eastern Region of the American College of Prosthodontists (ACP). This award recognizes extraordinary collegiality, outreach and community service, highlighting the role a prosthodontist plays in advancing the quality of life for patients in their community.

“I am extremely honored and humbled to receive this award,” said Dr. Cunningham. “I feel this recognition also belongs to the many dedicated individuals who have helped me along my journey. Without them this award would not be possible.”

Dr. Cunningham maintains a prosthodontic private practice in Durham, NC, where he is extremely active in promoting the specialty through lectures, outreach, and activities as president of the local dental society. He also holds an appointment as adjunct assistant professor in the Graduate Prosthodontic Program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

“Dr. Cunningham’s work ethic and attention to detail parallel the integrity and genuine enthusiasm with which he approaches the care of his patients,” said ACP Immediate Past President Dr. Robert M. Taft.

Originally from West Virginia, Dr. Cunningham completed his DDS, General Practice Residency and Master of Science in Prosthodontics from West Virginia University School of Dentistry. He is a Fellow of the ACP and a Diplomate of the American Board of Prosthodontics.
